A right on paper. A chance in real life.

Question: How do transport decisions help children get to school?

Alder and Bay are invented districts. All six records and October dates below are fictional. Use them to practise thinking, not as sources about real countries.

Rights reference: Article 28: education, with free primary schooling. Article 2: rights without discrimination. Article 12: children's views should be taken seriously. Rights are not rewards for good behaviour. A bus is a possible support, not the right itself.

Teaching paraphrases. UNICEF children's version: unicef.org/child-rights-convention/convention-text-childrens-version

A1 / What is planned?

Alder district notice

Fictional education office / published 1 October, model year

Primary school has no fees. A school bus is scheduled to leave the outer settlement at 8:10 and arrive before lessons begin at 8:30.

B1 / What is planned?

Bay district notice

Fictional education office / published 1 October, model year

Primary school has no fees. After hearing pupil requests, the transport office is testing an earlier departure for the harbour bus.

A2 / What happened?

One route's arrival log

Fictional school office / published 12 October; observations 5–9 October, model year

The bus from the outer settlement arrived after 8:30 on three of the five observed days. This log covers one route at one school.

B2 / What happened?

One route's arrival log

Fictional school office / published 12 October; observations 5–9 October, model year

The harbour bus arrived before lessons on all five observed days. This log covers one route at one school.

A3 / Whose experience?

Pupil council notes

Fictional pupil council / published 12 October; meeting 9 October, model year

Six pupils who use that bus asked for an earlier departure. The notes record their request but no reply from the transport office.

B3 / Whose experience?

Pupil council notes

Fictional pupil council / published 12 October; meeting 9 October, model year

Six harbour-route pupils said the earlier bus helped them. Two pupils from an outer settlement said the trial did not serve their area. The notes give no information about their journey.

What can I say? What is still uncertain?

Use the cards on page 1. Talk, sketch with labels, dictate or write. Keep your own reasoning. This is practice for the existing country inquiry, not a new required upload.

1. Build a careful claim about Bay.

Name a right. Use a card code and detail. Explain why the detail matters. “B__ shows ___. This connects to ___ because ___.”

2. Compare and limit the claim.

Compare one Alder and one Bay record using the same question. Who, where and when do they cover? What do they leave uncertain?

3. Repair an overclaim on your own.

“Bay protects every child's right to education because its bus was on time.” Keep what is supported. Replace what goes too far. Include a card code and a useful next question.

4. Begin your real inquiry, provisionally.

My two countries and shared question: ___. A rights connection: ___. My first search terms or source to look for: ___. You may change your question after searching.

When searching: record author, title/link, publication date, event/data date, people/place, evidence and purpose. Find an independent source. Compare the same issue, similar periods and definitions. Notice differences within each country.
